Rationale	The counselling sector in Australia, and in other western countries, has become highly specialised. This means that there is an expectation from the agencies and organisations that employ counsellors that those applying for counselling positions will not only have the skills and academic qualifications required, but also the ability to clearly articulate their professional practice framework.  In this, the fourth and final of the practicum-embedded units, students will not only reflect on all aspects of the course but from this learning but articulate and present, to their peers, their personal practice framework. As such, this unit provides opportunities for students to develop a personalised and holistic approach to their counselling practice through the integration of their values, knowledge, skills and the ethical and relational dimensions that comprise effective counselling. This process of consolidation will proceed through the use of reflective practice and integrative techniques building upon learning from the previous three units in the reflective practice sequence (CO667, CO668, and CO669).

	In addition, it is important that counselling students understand and apply principles and strategies related to resilience-building in a profession with high rates of stress, burn-out and vicarious traumatisation. By the conclusion of this unit, it is expected that students will be able to articulate, apply and critically reflect on their individual framework of practice including a well-integrated understanding of the impact the values and principles of a Christian worldview has on their counselling practice.
