Prerequisites/ co-requisites/ restrictions Rationale	It is important for students at an entry level of an undergraduate social sciences award to be exposed to a broad range of professional contexts in which they may one day be employed or with whom they may network. In addition to this, students need to begin to develop an understanding of ethical issues within their field and work from a values basis. This unit is designed to provide students with a brief overview of a number of applied social sciences fields of practice in order to help them make more informed decisions concerning their future study and career options, and the roles of the professional in different settings. This role of the professional will be used as a driving influence to help students think about their own values. The unit also provides an opportunity for students to begin to identify similarities and differences that exist in and between various areas of human services, to understand overarching ethical issues and to reflect on the diverse professions that comprise the applied social sciences from a Christian worldview. This will allow students to develop their ability to engage in specific social sciences contexts in ethical value based ways.
